Montana Physician Goes Independent

A Montana physician is going free. Dr. Cara Harrop is opening up a direct primary care clinic. She was burned out and planning to make a career change when she discovered the DPC model. DPC clinics don't take insurance, Medicare or Medicaid. They take cash, check or credit cards.

She thinks insurance, and its administrative tasks, is the central flaw in today's health care system, taking valuable time away from patients. So, she's going independent. Her clinic will be called PureHealth DPC. She'll offer services, take monthly cash payments, build strong relationships and be available to her patients. And we'll be asking her to sign up at JoinTheWedge.com
