ACA Mandate Killed 250,000 Jobs

A study of small business hiring practices post-Obamacare estimates the law has cost Americans 250,000 jobs. The law's employer mandate requires companies with 50 or more full-time employees to offer health insurance or pay a fine.

Democrat and Republican managers at 745 small businesses across the nation, representing every major industry, were surveyed. Many managers that did not offer health insurance told the surveyors that they hired less and cut hours to stay below the 50-fulltime-employees threshold. This means 250,000 people are unemployed today because of Obamacare. Count this as one more reason Congress should fully repeal the law.
