EHRs Are Causing Physician Burnout

Seeing a physician may soon be a luxury of the past. Many are committing suicide, and others are leaving the practice early.

They've been forced to be data clerks instead of doctors. They are burned out from the government-imposed electronic health record that tells them how to practice medicine and violates their ethics.

Studies show the electronic health record (EHR) is the primary reason for physician burnout. As I write in my new book, the EHR was made for data collection and outsider control of treatment decisions, not patient care. Please buy the book and get engaged, or face the possibility of not having a physician in your future. Go to BigBrotherInTheExamRoom.com
