GOP Bill Opens Taxpayers to Continued Insurer Bailouts

Taxpayers should be worried about the GOP's so-called "Repeal and Replace" bill. First, it does not repeal Obamacare. Second, it does not repeal the law's three wealth redistribution programs that led to insurer bailouts and lawsuits when insurers didn't receive the funds they thought they deserved -- which they did not deserve, but that's another story.

Two of these redistribution programs ended in December, but the GOP bill does not repeal the program language, leaving open the possibility that insurers can continue to pursue billions in taxpayer-funded bailouts. The repeal bill that Obama vetoed a year ago repealed the programs. Why are the Republicans leaving them intact?
