Ivermectin Case Heard in Wisconsin Court

John Zingsheim walked into a hospital, tested positive for Covid and was put on remdesivir. His power of attorney demanded he be taken off the drug and John requested ivermectin, but the doctor refused saying it was below the hospital's standard of care. After more remdesivir and being put on a ventilator the family was encouraged to pull the plug, but they refused. One court ruled ivermectin must be given but another court blocked that ruling.

In good news, John was secretly given ivermectin and survived. Today he's breathing on his own after 100 days on a ventilator. A lawsuit at the Wisconsin Supreme Court seeks to affirm that a court can intervene to save a life regardless of hospital standards of care, and that hospitals must comply with power of attorney demands.
