Physician Assistant Fired for Reporting Vaccine Injuries

The federal government requires everyone giving the Covid shot to report adverse events. But physician assistant Deborah Conrad said reporting caused her to lose her job. After she started seeing unusual symptoms, some of which she'd never seen in 20 years, she began reporting them. For example, she'd never admitted a patient with RSV before Covid, but every patient with RSV had taken the Covid shot.

Reporting was an overwhelming task. She suggested to leadership that they hire someone to manage the reporting, but in April 2021, leadership said no one else was reporting injuries. They claimed she was overreporting which was leading to vaccine hesitancy. Deborah did not back down. After she became a whistleblower, she was fired.
