How Many Boosters are You Willing to Take?

We know the so-called vaccine isn’t a vaccine. It doesn’t stop transmission and it allows the injected to become infected. That’s why the booster is being pushed. But the second person found in the U.S. with the new omicron variant was fully injected and had the booster.

Meanwhile, those getting boosters are forcing their bodies to make even more spike protein, the part of the virus and the injection that appears to be causing nasty reactions including heart damage, Bell’s palsy, permanent disability and more. And then there’s evidence out of England that injected adults are dying at twice the rate of uninjected adults. The vaccines may also put your innate immune system on pause leaving you more vulnerable to Covid and other illnesses So how many boosters are you willing to take with no promise of immunity?
