Dangerous Cancers Found Late — Due to Shutdowns

Cancers are being detected “at later and more dangerous stages after the pandemic delayed standard screenings that pick up the disease in its most treatable forms,” according to the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Cancer screenings decreased by about 90 percent during the pandemic because patients stayed home out of fear and because clinics were closed.

When the shutdown began, the National Cancer Institute estimated 10,000 excess deaths from breast and colorectal cancer over the next 10 years. Imagine how different this could have been if ivermectin had been permitted to stop Covid in its tracks, thus stopping the fear and preventing unnecessary deaths then, now, and in the future.
