Patients Have the Most to Lose

Covid mandates and lockdowns have severely impacted medical care, far beyond Covid itself. For example, patients with cancers were diagnosed late, and other patient's cancers worsened when they couldn't get chemotherapy.

In addition, many doctors and nurses left the health care field when they were forced to decide between the experimental jab and their job. They chose termination over vaccination. Many are not coming back. This has caused severe staffing shortages.

The economic downturn caused by lockdowns also has led to unaffordable housing costs for health care workers. This crisis is causing some desperate health care systems to build employee housing. As more lockdown impacts continue to emerge, patients are still the ones with the most to lose.

“Hospital workers are fleeing high housing costs: Where are they moving?” Kelly Gooch and Marissa Plescia, Becker's Hospital Review, May 4, 2022: <https://bit.ly/39L8DMp>
