Single-Payer Propaganda from Yale

Researchers at Yale estimate more than 200,000 deaths could have been avoided in 2020 if America had a socialized universal coverage system. They blame the lack of a government system rather than destructive government shutdowns that led to loss of job-related coverage, shuttered clinics, and postponed diagnosis and treatment.

Why didn’t they blame tax policies that force Americans into employer-sponsored coverage where they risk losing that coverage if they lose their job?

They also claim Medicare for all would have saved about $140 billion. But Medicare is running out of money, doctors are disappearing due to government controls, and rationing has increased. Are these Yale researchers doing research or issuing propaganda?
