Wisconsin Physician Chooses Freedom

Remember when the practice of medicine seemed more like a mission? It felt like a place where you were cared for and listened to, where your questions were answered. It wasn't rushed. Those doctors sometimes came to the clinic on the weekend if you needed something or even went to your home.

I'm pleased to tell you that that kind of physician is re-emerging slowly out of the rubble of managed care, and five-minute visits, and intrusive questionnaires, and prices that cost way too much for way too little time.

Dr. David Usher in Hudson, Wisconsin says if doctors aren't paying attention to the financial wellbeing of the patient, then they're not treating the whole patient. He recently opened a new direct-pay family medicine practice called ReforMedicine. Find similar practices at JointheWedge.com
