When You Don't Pay Your Doctor, What Happens?

What if you didn't pay for your own groceries and a government agency paid the store based on the performance of store managers, not on actual goods provided. How long before stores refused to stock sirloin steak?

This is what's happening to doctors. Because patients don't pay most medical bills, government has seized control of payment. Instead of being paid for services, doctors are increasingly paid for performance, quality and value as defined by bureaucrats and data-crunchers.

This is why doctors are spending so much time clicking data into a computer. They're paid for data submission and for compliance with treatment protocols that payers use to decide if the doctors get paid. If you want a doctor that's working for you, go to JointheWedge.com
