The Vaccinated Get a New Superpower

The fully vaccinated have a new superpower. According to the CDC, they can now determine whether people are low- or high-risk for getting severe Covid-19 disease and on that basis socialize with the low-risk, unvaccinated with no masks or social distancing. Why would that be, given the vaccine will not keep the vaccinated from getting Covid-19, and no one knows whether the vaccinated can spread the disease to the unvaccinated?

Nevertheless, the government that shut down your business, put you behind a mask, kept your children out of school and issued rigid lockdown orders has now given the vaccinated the freedom to no longer protect the unvaccinated. This is lunacy—unless the protections were never really necessary. And indeed, the disease’s progression appears similar in states with and without lockdowns.
