Ban the IBM Vaccination Passport

While various governors have banned vaccine passports, New York state adopted the Excelsior Pass. Residents download the app, enter their names, date of birth and ZIP code and answer personal questions to confirm their identity. They'll use the app to prove vaccination and Covid test status.

Helping the government restrict freedom is lucrative. New York paid $2.5 million for this IBM system that will be used to discriminate against those who choose not to be tested or choose not to receive the experimental injection. For example, those using the app can have larger wedding parties. Those who don't can't. Some hope the passport will expand to other uses.
