Face-Mask Masquerade

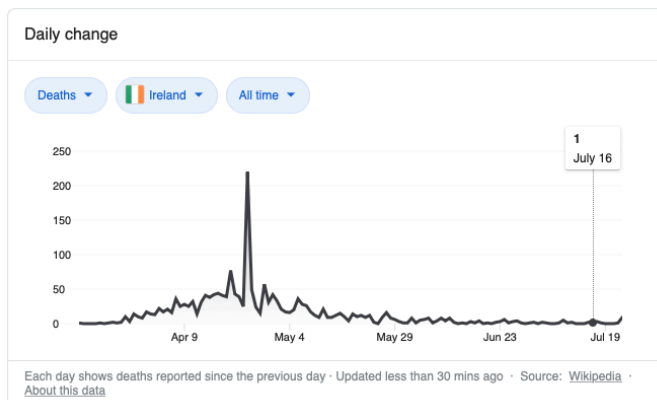

At the height of Ireland's epidemic, and in June when there were no cases, no one talked of masks. But now when the virus is all but gone, Ireland has mandated masks. One activist in Ireland says the government is doing it to "create a visibility of the terror they want to inculcate in the people." In other words, Ireland is using masks to keep the fear going.

"The mask" he says, "is a way of denying the very human face of the person," and causing everyone to look at each other "as a festering mess of bacteria and viruses" that's dangerous to their health. The aim, he says, is to "destroy the spirit of the human person, the individuality, the personality, the conscience, the character of the human person." This tyranny of the mask is also happening in America. We all need to see this "mask-querade" for what it really is.
