Dems Debate How to Impose Socialized Medicine

The first issue in last week's first Democratic debate was health care. It was a half hour brawl. Each Democratic candidate tried to one-up the other on how they would impose socialized medicine on Americans.

Some want to do it fast, through Medicare for All, which is actually Medicaid for All. This program would eliminate private insurance, employer programs, the current government programs and labor union coverage.

Some want to do it slow. They would offer a voluntary public option, letting people buy into a public program. Experts agree that this will lead to the end of private insurance as more and more people choose less expensive government coverage and collapse the private market.

No one advanced the idea of restoring freedom and affordability through a free market. Are you surprised?
