The CDC Has Property Rights on Coronavirus

In 2007, the CDC obtained a patent on coronavirus. The CDC also got patents on detecting and measuring the coronavirus. Thus, it has certain property rights.

The federal government funded so-called “gain of function” research to make coronavirus and influenza more deadly or transmissible. For example, one researcher made the deadly “bird flu” airborne. In 2014, this dangerous research was suspended. But that very year, our government began funding the research offshore at the Wuhan Institute of Virology in China. Over six years, it paid $3.37 million dollars. The federal government now has property rights over vaccines for the coronavirus, which may have escaped from Wuhan. So, do you trust the CDC on COVID-19?
