Jewish Health Sharing Ministry Begins

“Jews Now Have A Faith-Based Alternative to Health Insurance,” heralds the headline of a Jewish publication. United Refuah is the first health sharing organization for Jewish people. It began operating in Cleveland in 2018 and has about 2,000 members in 28 states, but most are from New Jersey and New York.

When the founders could not convince a Christian sharing organization to open a Jewish program they opened their own. There are slightly more than 100 sharing ministries nationwide, virtually all Christian. Total membership has risen to about one million people, a sharp rise from the 160,000 people who were members the year Obamacare took effect.
