COVID-19 is More “Coup D’etat” Than Virus

Investment banker Catherine Austin Fitts says central bankers are using COVID-19 to eliminate cash and advance digital transactions, allowing them to control populations. A health care crisis, she says, is the perfect way to put this system in place before the public understands it. Fear has made people agreeable to extraordinary surveillance, on the theory that government is protecting them.

She describes COVID-19 as the “institution of controls necessary to convert the planet from democratic process to technocracy.” She says, “It’s much more like a coup d’etat than a virus.” COVID restrictions have led to remote work and school, advancing digital tracking. In China, she says, the Communist Party uses digital surveillance and transactions to shut off funds to those who misbehave.
