Can Employers Force Me to Submit to COVID-19 Testing?

Can your employer force you to use a mask, be tested for COVID-19, or submit to having daily temperature checks? I checked the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission for answers. The Commission says your employer can check your temperature daily and ask about symptoms. Your employer can also require you to wear a mask, other protective equipment, social distance and wash your hands.

Your employer can also choose to test you for COVID-19 as long as the test is reliable. Interestingly, although the Commission does not require it, the National Law Review suggests employers get consent. Regarding contact tracing, the Commission says nothing but a law firm says contact tracing apps are not prohibited. That said, it’s unclear whether an employer could mandate your use of these apps for contact tracing.
