Court Sends Obamacare “Christmas Gift”

Last week during the impeachment escapade, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled on the Affordable Care Act. They found the individual mandate unconstitutional, but did not rule on whether that made the entire law invalid. They sent it back to the district court to decide. Last year, the district court ruled the entire law invalid and is likely to do so again. This delay means the case probably won't reach the Supreme Court until after the 2020 election.

Thanks to our donors, we were able to send an amicus brief to the court. And to our surprise and delight, the judges quoted part of that brief in the very first sentence of the ruling. So, thank you!
