A Vaccine that is Not a Vaccine

The COVID-19 vaccine is not a vaccine. Pfizer says, “In countries where the vaccine has not been approved by the relevant regulatory authority, it is an investigational drug, and its safety and efficacy have not been established.” And so it is. The FDA has not approved it as a vaccine or anything else. Pfizer only has emergency use authorization.

Dr. Fauci says, “The primary endpoint” of the Moderna and Pfizer trials, “was preventing clinically recognizable disease, namely symptoms associated with the infection.” He says the 95 percent efficacy claims are not for stopping COVID, but reducing symptoms. Unlike the tetanus vaccine, which keeps you from getting tetanus, these vaccines will not stop you from getting COVID.
