The Vaccinated are Not Immune from Covid-19

The truth is hard to find in Covid, but here's one fact: the Covid-19 vaccine is not a vaccine. According to the CDC's own definition a vaccine creates immunity. The CDC further defines immunity as preventing infection. But the so-called Covid-19 vaccines do not prevent infection; they reduce or prevent symptoms. Some vaccinated people have become infected after the vaccination and at least one has died from the virus.

Fact number two: Pfizer calls its vaccine an "investigational drug," because it has not been approved by the FDA. Because it's called a "vaccine," the manufacturers are protected from lawsuits if patients experience serious side effects, like blood clots, anaphylactic shock, or death. The clinical trials of this global experiment do not end until 2023.
