Welcome to the Health Freedom Minute. This is Twila Brase, president of Citizens' Council for Health Freedom.

Before I talk about snooping, I want you to know our redesigned website is up. This means the health freedom minute will be up every day so if you miss it, just go to healthfreedomminute.net and listen to it or read it.

Now back to snooping. Here’s an amazing statistic. “Nosy staff members committed most of the personal data breaches that hit more than 70% of healthcare organizations last year,” according to a study reported in InformationWeek. 35% of employees snooped into the records of fellow employees and 27% accessed the records of friends and relatives.

The article says it is often harder for an employee to inappropriately access paper records than electronic health records. This is obvious. So why are we told electronic medical records promise privacy?
