The Year of the Health Care Hack

Last year was the year of the health care hack. Hackers accessed over 100 million health records – 100 times more than ever before. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services said 8 of the 10 largest hacks into any type of healthcare provider happened last year.

This was predictable. The president, the GOP-led Congress, state and federal government, and the entire health and data industries forced everyone’s medical information to be computerized and made accessible over the Internet. HIPAA allowed it and you weren’t given a choice.

But state legislators are allowed to require patient consent before your data can be hooked up to the Internet. Ask your state legislators to require consent.
