January 14, 2016

The Affordable Penalties Act

“Many See I.R.S. Penalties as More Affordable Than Insurance,” announces a New York Times headline. So perhaps Obamacare is better called the Affordable Penalties Act. One man says the $1,800 penalty is more affordable than an annual premium of $2,900 or more.

A woman says she’d have to spend more than $12,000 to get beyond the preventive benefits from the cheapest plan available. If something catastrophic happens she says, “I feel like it’s better just to die.” About the tax penalty of $1,500, she claims, “Come and get me.”

Another woman, finding out that her auto insurance has better medical coverage, hopes anything catastrophic happens in her car. This is Obamacare.

Presented daily by Twila Brase, President, Citizens’ Council for Health Freedom.