The Threat of REAL ID

Many state legislatures are abdicating their responsibility to protect you from federal encroachment called REAL ID, which is a national ID card for federal control of identification, movement and access to goods and services, including healthcare. To create public angst that will pressure state legislators to pass a law mandating compliance with REAL ID, Homeland Security is threatening to stop people from flying.

But the federal government can’t make the state comply. That would be unconstitutional commandeering. That’s why five threatening deadlines have come and gone over the past 11 years. They can’t stop you from flying without REAL ID, so they want your legislators to adopt the federal law as state law -- and then they can stop you. Just say no.
