Freedom of Conscience Rights to Be Recognized

I have good news. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services plans to restore freedom of conscience protections for health care workers. In 2011, the Obama administration stripped most protections out of the freedom of conscience rule issued by President Bush.

In short, the protective Bush rule was gutted. The Bush rule was about 32,000 words long. The final Obama rule was only 209 words.

I’ll let you know when to send a supportive comment for the proposed rule. We must cheer them on. We must protect doctors and nurses from being forced to do what they must never be forced to do, such as abortion, sterilization, sex-change operations and more. Be prepared to send a comment to the federal government.
