Obamacare Innovation Center Central to Rationing

Obamacare established the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Innovation within the Medicare administration to experiment with payment and delivery of health care. The law specifically calls for moving away from paying doctors and hospitals for the actual services performed.

Instead they want to pay limited lump-sum and bundled payments that doctors have to divvy out over the year and over the entire patient population. The law also supports paying physicians better if they practice medicine the way federal officials deem “appropriate.” The Medicare Innovation Center, with a $1 billion annual taxpayer-funded budget, is the centerpiece of Obama’s health care rationing and transformation plan.
