Find Cheaper Meds in The Wedge

When it comes to drug prices, think beyond the headlines. Remember the EpiPen, which used to cost $100 for a pack of two injectors. When it quickly rose to $600 there was an outcry that led to Senate hearings. The company dropped the price to $300 and now a new generic is also $300.

There's a much better way. According to doctors I know, a syringe and an ampule of epinephrine cost about a dollar. Go to The Wedge of Health Freedom at JointheWedge.com to find a doctor who keeps costs in mind and better ideas on the tip of his or her tongue. Let them sell you the supplies and teach you how to give a shot of epinephrine. It's easy, it's quick, and it could save you $298 each year.

“Generic EpiPen not any cheaper than existing version,” Nathaniel Weixel, The Hill, November 27, 2018: <https://thehill.com/policy/healthcare/418463-generic-epipen-not-any-cheaper-than-existing-version>
