Doctor on Demand Raises $74 Million

Have you ever used telemedicine? The word “telemedicine” means “healing from a distance.” In short, you and the practitioner are not in the same spot when you’re communicating.

If this is new topic for you, it’s a hot topic for others. For example, a new video-based telemedicine company called Doctor on Demand just raised $74 million to expand the service nationwide and abroad. As the company’s CEO says, “Most people have no idea they can see a board-certified physician on their phone from their bed while they’re sick at two in the morning with a five-minute wait time.” Consider telemedicine as an option the next time you’re sick and don’t want to leave your home.
