Doctors are Cash-Paying Patients Too

It’s not just patients that choose to be uninsured. Some physicians are dropping coverage, paying cash and joining health sharing organizations. Emergency room doctor Brian Faulkner and his family no longer pay $1200 a month for coverage. Brad Why, a nurse practitioner ended family coverage after he developed a great disrespect for the insurer’s limits on care and dictatorial behavior and he just didn’t want to pay them anymore.

Dr. Landon Roussel, left a hospital job, opened up a cash-based direct primary care clinic, and joined a health-sharing ministry. The prices for care are often negotiable if you’re going uninsured and paying cash. Find a cash-based practice by going to JointheWedge.com
