48 Percent of Physicians Making Exit Plans

Baby boomers are entering Medicare at a rate of 10,000 senior citizens every day. Yet the money coming into the program has fallen short since 2008. Medicare is expected to be insolvent in just 11 years.

Instead of giving current and pending senior citizens an escape hatch from Medicare, Congress is finding ways to pay doctors and hospitals less to care for more and more seniors. No wonder 48 percent of more than 10,000 physicians surveyed are planning to cut back on hours, retire, take a non-clinical job, switch to ‘concierge’ medicine or take other steps that will further limit patient access.
