Should Doctors Be Skilled Data Clerks?

The American Medical Association wants physician training to lessen the negative impact of electronic health records (EHRs) on the patient-doctor relationship. That’s a valid concern. But it also wants doctors trained in clinical documentation so they’re better equipped to meet the “changing expectations” of “government and society.”

That’s the wrong focus. Physicians should be equipped to meet their ethical and professional obligations to patients—like the doctors at JointheWedge.com.

In a few weeks, my groundbreaking book on the dangers of the electronic health record to privacy, safety, health and liberty will be on sale. If you want to be notified, go to http://www.BigBrotherintheExamRoom.com
