When Federal Agencies Go Rogue

Democrats and President Obama provided at least $27 billion to doctors and hospitals to partially cover the cost of installing the electronic health records they mandated. Federal officials were so focused on getting these command and control systems installed that they didn’t bother to check that clinics asking for payments of up to $44,000 per doctor complied with the law.

The HHS Office of the Inspector General just issued a report saying federal government often failed to follow Federal requirements before making these payments to doctors. Nearly $730 million was paid to clinics that did not meet federal requirements. The Inspector recommends trying to recover the money, but the federal agency said they’re not interested in doing so.
