Should Vaccine-Cautious Doctors Be Re-Educated?

The Star Tribune editorial board wants state legislators to repeal parent rights and impose coercive vaccination.

In an editorial that says the State should crack down on doctors who let parents refuse vaccinations,” the board supports the sanctioning and re-education requirements imposed on a California physician who exempted a 2-year old from the measles vaccine. His care was ruled “grossly negligent.” Thus, the board calls Minnesota’s conscientious objection option for vaccination a “dangerous loophole.”

But the editors never mention the vaccinated who get measles or the federal vaccination injury program, which has paid families nearly $4 billion for death and damaged lives.
