Eugenics in Iceland

“Iceland is close to becoming the first country where no-one gives birth to a child with Down’s syndrome,” reports a British newspaper. The voluntary “Combination Test” uses ultrasound, blood tests, and the mother’s age to check for abnormalities. If found, most mothers terminate their pregnancy.

The head of a Prenatal Diagnosis Unit, who told the reporter that murder is “so black and white,” said “We don’t look at abortion as a murder. We look at it as a thing that we ended….We ended a possible life that may have had a huge complication.” Apparently, the few children born each year with Down’s syndrome result from an inaccurate test. So, how many normal pregnancies have been terminated?
