A Neurologist Breaks Free

A neurologist set himself free from the bureaucratic practice of medicine most doctors are stuck in today. He found a way to escape into happiness, freedom, and patient-focused care.

He opened a cash-based practice. After five years, his office has grown to 5,000 patients. Most pay cash, but about 10% of his work is pro bono. He's even set up a charitable nonprofit to provide patient education, wheelchairs and oxygen tanks.

He feels liberated, breathes deeply and laughs more. Ask your doctors whether they feel liberated or in chains and then offer to pay cash if they choose to go free like the doctors found at JoinTheWedge.com.
