Speaking About Big Brother in Indianapolis

Today, I'm in Indianapolis speaking before a large group of physicians about Big Brother in the Exam Room. They know exactly what I mean. You may think the computer in the exam room is just a digital version of your medical record, but they know it isn’t. This computer system was designed for tracking, profiling and control. It was designed to be intrusive.

In 2009, when President Obama and the Democrats mandated a government-certified electronic health record in every exam room and at the bedside, this government-designed electronic health record became a tool to control physician treatment decisions. Patients and doctors have been suffering ever since. Physicians know the EHR is a surveillance machine to tie their hands. Do you?
