How Inexpensive Could Medication Be?

What if your medication could cost pennies on the dollar? It's happening at direct-pay clinics and no pharmacy is involved.

For example, instead of paying $40 for a Z-pack, you could pay closer to the $2.50 it costs one clinic to buy them wholesale. A Kansas doctor says inexpensive drugs are a primary benefit he offers. And Dr. Lisa Davidson in Colorado pays about $2.00 for 100 tablets of a certain medication and sells them for $8.00, a mark-up but a huge savings for her patients.

Unfortunately, some states forbid clinics from dispensing drugs, but that needs to change. Find these kinds of practices at JointheWedge.com
