How Wrong Can a Reporter Be?

Big media loves Obamacare, but sometimes reporters get perturbed at their own partners in crime. Trudy Lieberman at the Columbia Journalism Review chastised her colleagues for playing “follow the leader” and for faulty reporting that she says left the public unclear about what the law would do for them, thus giving the law’s opponents an opportunity to build the opposition.

She said mainstream media should have made it clear that the law is only for a small number of people. They should have explained why modest wealth redistribution is necessary, why the mandate was necessary to make the system work, that health insurers aren’t to blame and that Obamacare is a Republican idea. How wrong could one reporter be??
