Please Tell Me Your Stories

I’d like to hear your personal stories. Recently people have told me doctors look at computer screens rather than their face. One older woman said doctors used to touch you but now they only touch the computer. One man felt responsible for not knowing how the surgery would affect him, for not asking the right questions. But I told him it’s the responsibility of the doctor to make sure patients are fully informed; patients don’t even know the questions to ask. They’re patients, they’re not the experts.

The caring mission of medicine is being subsumed by the callous business of health. Please use the green feedback button on our home page to tell me your stories. Go to cchfreedom.org. That’s cchfreedom.org.
