The Crumbling Begins

A Minnesota health insurer has dropped out of the Obamacare exchange leaving nearly 32,000 people behind. PreferredOne, with 59% of the state’s Obamacare enrollees, and the one with the lowest price, will not return in 2015. Enrollees must change coverage, will likely pay more and may lose their doctor.

The insurer said it was “purely a business decision.” They said the cost to enroll MNsure recipients is “not administratively and financially sustainable.” In other words, it is too much work for too little benefit. Expect more insurers to exit Obama’s exchanges, leaving enrollees with fewer choices and higher prices.
