Sophie's Choice on Coverage

There are 72 days left to enroll, not just for Obamacare, but for all insurance. This limited window was not discussed during the Obamacare debate because it would have scared the public. No law requires insurers to close their doors for nine months, but insurers did it to force healthy people to buy coverage because they knew the sick were going to enroll.

Government officials and insurers hoped the fear of getting sick and being unable to buy insurance would drive everyone to get covered. But the cost of insurance under Obamacare is scarier than being uninsured. Many have chosen to go uninsured rather than waste much of their income on unaffordable coverage.
