What's in the Tax Bill

The House tax reform bill proposes significant changes. It repeals deductions for medical expenses and adoption assistance, including medical expenses for adopted children. And it repeals tax credits for clinical testing of drugs for rare diseases.

It also threatens charitable giving, which is only tax-deductible if you itemize. Today, 33 percent of Americans itemize, but the bill doubles the standard deduction, which could mean only 5 percent of Americans will. This may cut charitable giving by $13 billion. While donations in 2016 from all sources exceeded $390 billion, non-profits dependent on individual donations are very concerned.
