November 9, 2012

EPA's New Tuskegee

The Environmental Protection Agency has been conducting not-so-protective experiments on humans. Since 2004, the EPA has allegedly been exposing human subjects to high levels of air pollutants such as diesel exhaust and a certain fine particulate matter regulated by the EPA specifically because “it kills people.” Many subjects are already unhealthy because of asthma or old age.

The EPA says they warn people that they could die, but they don’t do it in writing. A lawsuit has been filed by the American Tradition Institute. Three physicians are involved in the experiments and a state Medical Board is investigating, but Obama's bioethics commission has refused to get involved.