The Danger of Medicaid Couch Potatoes

Author Peter Cove says only 55 percent of American adults age 18 to 64 have full time jobs. In fact, the number of working able-bodied men is lower than at the end of the Great Depression.

Blame welfare. Three-fifths of men who don’t work receive disability payments and more than one-fifth of working age men are on Medicaid.

A whopping 41 percent of able-bodied adults on Medicaid do not have jobs. Cove suggests a work requirement to reduce dependency. So, what happens to a country whose able-bodied men live off the wages of their neighbors? That country is in danger of losing its industry, prosperity, national pride and freedom.
