Answering Congress's Question about the 20 Million

When I was recently in Washington, D.C. I was often asked what do to about the 20 million Obamacare enrollees.

I told them: More than 5 million of the 13 million Medicaid enrollees were eligible before Obamacare but didn’t enroll. They came out of the woodwork after the mandate. After the ACA is repealed Medicaid may be more affordable and states can decide who’s eligible. Federal block grants would make this easier.

The 5.9 million people on Obamacare that lost their insurance because of the law will be able to buy the affordable catastrophic policies outlawed by Obamacare. State high-risk pools can again cover the more than 200,000 people with pre-existing conditions. And some Americans may choose to go uninsured again.
