Was the Timing of the ACA Ruling Planned?

Why did Judge Reed O'Connor rule on the Affordable Care Act when he did? Two weeks ago, the federal District Court judge in Texas ruled the entire law unconstitutional. It was a Friday evening. It was basically 10 days before Christmas. It was after the election and after Congress went home for the holidays. It was the start of a weekend that for many people was focused on Christmas shopping. Many were already out for the evening by the time the ruling came down and was announced by the press.

When the government wants to hide something, they issue it late on Fridays. Was the judge hoping to diminish the backlash of the Left by burying it in the season's festivities? Perhaps, but we'll never know. And if that was the plan, it didn't work.
