Obamacare Voter Registration Debate

A 1993 law, called the National Voter Registration Act, requires government agencies to offer individuals the opportunity to register to vote. At issue is whether Obamacare’s government exchange is actually a government agency. As I’ve said in previous broadcasts, the federal government seems to want it both ways.

But State exchanges have their own opinions. New York and Vermont are planning to sign people up. Hawaii and Colorado say they aren’t responsible for registering new voters. The ACLU is getting involved. They have charged California’s exchange with doing too little to register voters. As reported by the Washington Post, voter sign-ups may benefit Democrats.
